

MEETINGS WASTING YOUR TIME?

You're not alone. While meetings are always well intentioned, they usually end up spiraling off topic with no outcome, eventually becoming a "bad meeting". Unfortunately, these bad meetings are what erode performance and impact your company's bottom line. See the three reasons why meetings get a "bad" rap:

REASON 1: MEETINGS TAKE UP TOO MUCH TIME

Most professionals attend a total of 61.8 meetings per month

A survey of office workers show they are spending a quarter of their work week in meetings or in meeting prep. Work for 40 years and you'll spend 10 years in meetings or getting ready to be in them

About a third of employees say meetings are inefficient and could be shorter

REASON 2: MEETINGS LACK FOCUS AND STRUCTURE

Most professionals who meet on a regular basis...

Admit to daydreaming

Doing unrelated work

50% of the time spent in meetings is entirely useless, usually due to the lack of any kind of agenda or plan regarding the meeting itself

73% consider having a prepared agenda as "very important"

They also say their meetings never start and end on time, technology challenges often contributing to the delay

89% of people believe that better technology could improve their meetings

REASON 3: POST MEETING, THERE'S NO FOLLOW THROUGH

Even if you have a good meeting that feels focused and productive, if nothing happens afterwards...it's still a bad meeting.

Specific actions, owners & timelines are unclear: generalisations and lots of "we" don't specify what needs to get done, who's responsible and when it needs to be done by

Information is all over the place: 61% of workers today use more than four applications and 13% access more than 11 applications on a daily basis, increasing the challenge to follow through and progress against action items
